

Grammar and Punctuation Bingo

Give each pupil a blank bingo card. Show pupils the list of terms below, or read them out one at a time, and ask them to create their bingo card by writing each word in one of the boxes. They should place these randomly, so each card is different.

To play the game, read the questions from the list in any order, crossing them off as you go to keep track of which ones have been called. Pupils should listen to each question and cross the matching term off on their bingo sheet. Keep playing until one player has crossed off four squares in a straight line (across, down, or diagonally) – they are the winner! Ask them to read back the words they have crossed off, so you can check they have the right answers.

direct speech	"Let's go!" said Sam is an example of what kind of speech?
Indirect speech	Mum said we would be late is an example of what kind of speech?
Brackets	These can be used to indicate parenthesis, or extra information in a sentence.
Plural possession	We show this by putting an apostrophe AFTER the s.
Prefix	Something added to the start of a word to make a new word.
Suffix	Something added to the end of a word to make a new word.
Semi-colon	A punctuation mark used to show a pause in a sentence which is less than a comma but more than a full stop.
Informal language	The way you might talk to close friends or family.
Determiner	Words like 'a' or 'an' are examples of these.
Colon	A punctuation mark made up of two dots, which might be used to introduce a list.
Active voice	A sentence written in this voice means that the subject is doing the action.
Passive voice	This voice is used when the writer wants to place more emphasis on what has happened, instead of who did something.
Present perfect tense	This is used to show that something has already happened, but is still connected to something which is going on now.
Fronted adverbial	This comes at the start of a sentence and gives you more information about the verb.
Pronoun	A word like he, she or it which can replace the noun in a sentence.
Synonym	A word with a similar meaning to another word
Antonym	A word which has the opposite meaning to another word

Bingo Card
